

SAINT JAMES SCHOOL OF MEDICINE STUDENT NEWSLETTER

Vol. 4 Issue 10 March 2011

MOBILE APPS FOR MEDICAL STUDENTS

Whether you're a doctor, student or professor, you probably have to use Pubmed, the US National Library of Medicine's publicly accessible index of Medline citations, on a regular basis. Although Pubmed has a mobile version of its website, it looks outdated and is not the easiest to use. Several apps have appeared in Apple's app store for iOS devices, to improve your searching experience. To read more about medical mobile apps go to www.imedicalapps.com

EXAM MASTER NEWS

Exam Master has finished a year long project that involved having all of the Step 1 questions reviewed, updated, removed (when needed) and resulting in a more relevant and concise question bank. Exam Master is planning to release this in March. Because our school is one of the most active users, we are being invited to try out the new Step 1 question bank. Students are also invited to provide feedback to Exam Master. Look for this after you login, this month. Check this Website out: Presented by Interactive Medical Media, Dermnet: Skin Disease Image Atlas (www.dermnet.com) is a website that contains over 23,000 images of skin disease. Images can be enlarged via a click and can be located by browsing image categories or by using a search engine. The site also contains a selection of videos on a number of skin diseases. The images and videos are available free of charge, and users can purchase and license high-resolution copies of images for publishing purposes. Remember that we also have Medical Imagebase, after you login to our EBSCO database.
